Year in Review

US CONGRESSMAN

TJ COX

CALIFORNIA'S 21ST DISTRICT

Coming to Washington one year ago, as an engineer and small businessman – not a politician – Representative TJ Cox hasn't wasted a second in leading on the biggest issues facing Central Valley families.

Representative Cox has worked with anyone and everyone—Republican, Independent & Democrat—to deliver for the Central Valley, not special interest donors.

That's why, in 2019, he had a bill to help family farms signed by President Trump, worked directly with communities across the Central Valley to craft a bill that directly targets the challenges small communities face in delivering clean drinking water, has introduced bills and secured appropriations funding to fix Central Valley waterways like the Delta-Mendota and Friant-Kern canals, helped lead and pass the first bill to tackle the farm labor shortage to make it out of the House in years, among other achievements.

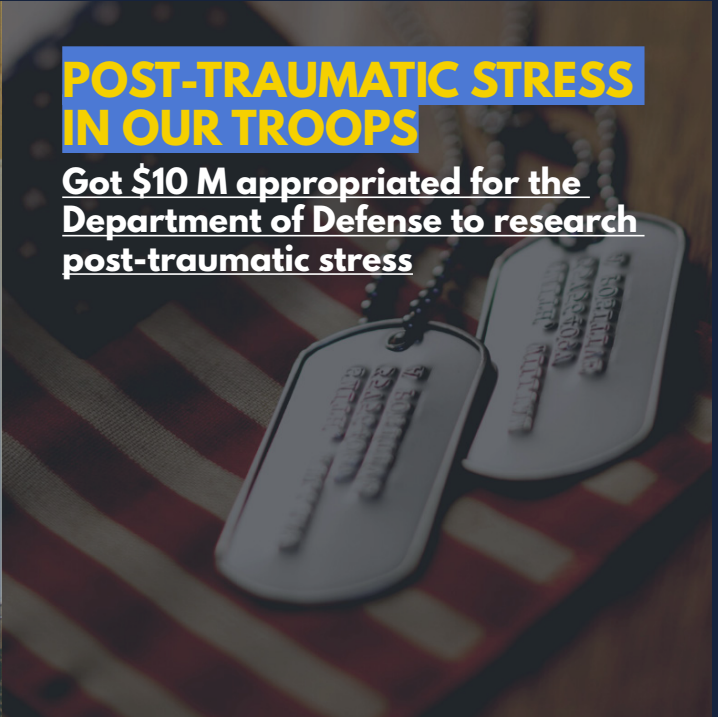

This report will lay out some of what Rep. Cox has done to prioritize the Central Valley, in legislative wins, ways he has kept this administration accountable, and how Rep. Cox's constituent services team has helped constituents cut through Washington's red tape.

Chona got an amazing job offer, but if her work authorization application wasn't approved within a month of the job offer, she was in danger of losing it. Rep. "Ms. Virginia did not hesitate to accommodate us, and from the moment we spoke to her, we knew that she has been helping a lot of people of similar case as ours because she demonstrated her knowledge on the process.
